HEARTWARE

I.T. DEPARTMENT

This artwork turns familiar materials like wires, circuits, and reclaimed fragments, into something unexpectedly tender.

Shaped like a heart, it reflects the quiet strength people carry each day: the long hours, the silent perseverance, the parts of themselves they keep running even when they feel worn.

Beneath the structured exterior lives vulnerability, hope, and the need to be cared for. Heartware gently suggests that self-love is not indulgent; it is the quiet repair, the soft acknowledgment, that keeps a person whole.